Maynard Ferguson, jazz legend, internationally famous big band leader and one of the world's great trumpet players, is now in his fourth decade as a leader with a constantly changing band. He is always experimenting on the edge of what's happening and approaches his music as a constant adventure. Most of Maynard's year is spent touring with his Big Bop Nouveau Band, arguably the premiere jazz big band on the road today with almost nightly performances at festivals, concert halls, jazz clubs, and universities around the globe. This three time Grammy nominee, consistent Downbeat and Playboy Jazz Poll award winner is a potent force in the world of music education, making time to personally encourage young musicians. An instrument designer, record producer, composer, arranger, symphonic guest artist, and film soundtrack artist, Maynard Ferguson is a diverse and energetic musician whose talents far surpass trumpet player.

Born in Montreal, by age 4 he was playing piano and violin. By 9, he had enrolled in the French Conservatory of Music where he received his formal training. He soloed as a child prodigy with the Canadian Broadcasting Co. Orchestra in 1939 at age 11. At 16 he had his own jazz and dance band. All the players were twice his age except his brother, Percy. In 1948, Maynard made his debut in the U.S and the first of three major career periods began. In the 50's, he played with Charlie Barnett, Jimmy Dorsey, and Stan Kenton--dazzling the jazz world with his high trumpet blasts. After Kenton, he was first-call studio trumpeter and recorded film soundtracks for Paramount including The Ten Commandments. The recording of "Gonna Fly Now" from the movie Rocky catapulted him into "Pop" popularity with a top 10 single, a gold album, and one of his three Grammy nominations. Ferguson's bands have bred solo artists and his alumni list reads like a "Who's Who" in jazz: Chick Corea, Bob James, Bill Chase, Chuck Mangione, Slide Hampton, Don Ellis, Willie Maiden, Wayne Shorter, and many more.
